Amazed kid gif

The GIF is now 30 years old, but it already feels immortal - perhaps because it has already survived the most turbulent periods of the Evolutionary Internet. And as we consider the legacy of the largest file format on the Internet, we need to pause to recognize a special category of GIF that has left an indelible mark on social media: the GIF reaction. The Internet seems to have many, many, many candidates for the greatest GIF of all time, but it is undeniable that some GIF reactions are so ubiquitous that the average internet user can probably imagine them simply from reading a description. When you can stenographer blinking white guy and have people understand exactly what white flashing guy you're talking about, your GIF reaction has reached maximum internet saturation. Here are Vox's choices for the most iconic reaction GIFs on the Internet - ranked in order of necessity to our lives, from time to time essential to can't-use-the Internet-without-them. 16) lol nothing matters Origin: Tumblr word art artist Cat Frazier made this GIF in 2012. And a lot of people thought he summed up the national zeitgeist then. When to use it: Whenever the state of the world or the news or your life or anything else makes you feel like absolutely nothing matters more. 15) Homer slowly backing away Origin: This clumsy iconic Simpsons moment appears in season five, episode 16, Homer Loves Flanders; This is Homer's reaction to discovering that the Flemish family wants some non-Homer time for themselves. When to use it: You have entered an embarrassing situation, or just stumbled upon a large internet worm cane that you prefer not to open. 14) Gatsby Origin: 2013 by Leo DiCaprio The Great Gatsby was a sumptuous moment transcended its context to become an all-purpose reaction for the ages. When to use it: Whenever you want to toast or congratulate someone on the Internet - either ironically or sincerely. 13) Obama's microphone drops origin: When President Obama finished his remarks at his last White House Correspondents' Dinner in 2016, he literally dropped the microphone. When to use it: Whenever you need to drop the mic, make a killer exit, or end on a high note. 12) How are you, Dear Children? Origin: The appearance of Steve Buscemi in 2009 in the fourth season of 30 Rock has led to this timeless, timeless moment because, as long as the world continues to turn, older and non-cool adults will continue to beat in space while trying to connect with today's youth. When to use it: Every time an Old Man tries to blend into the Young. Warning: Using this GIF while may not actually make you appear more hip. 11) Blinking white guy Origin: One of the latest additions to the GIF gun reaction has been everywhere this year. The flashing white in question is the player Drew Scanlon, and the meme is his priceless reaction in 2013 to another player's casual description of farming with my hoe. (Admit it: You love it even more now than you know.) When to use it: Nathan Fillion's impotence (see #6) is simply not enough to convey your level of voicelessness. 10) James Van Der Beek is Crying Origin: It's actually a watershed moment for Dawson Creek fans - it's season three finale, True Love, and the turning point comes when our (controversial) hero, Dawson, loses on his realization that the girl he loves would be better off with his much healthier soul mate... which is not him. The famous moment would not have been scripted — Van Der Beek-as-Dawson was just as upset. According to Constance Grady, a teenage theatre expert at Vox, the fandom really hated Dawson and the hardcore was shipping Joey/Pacey, so there was a lot of schadenfreude at that moment when he essentially lost - all of which helped catapult this GIF into the status of perennial meme. When to use it: When you can't hold back your emotions or want to overreact — or, if you feel particularly mean, make fun of someone else's overreaction to any situation. 9) Kermit fail Origin: Jim Henson's most famous muppet is known for his frequent flailing jags on The Muppet Show, and this GIF captures the height of this trend. When to use it: When your excitement simply cannot be contained. 8) The cool walk Origin: It took seven seasons of Mad Men for Peggy Olson to amass the confidence and life experience needed to make her famous penultimate episode walk corridor a viral moment - but actress Elisabeth Moss sold every step, incidentally walking around in internet history. When to use it: This GIF is usually read as a micro fail moment, even though Peggy is technically entering her new office for the first time. Use it when you want to make an outing and let them want more, or react to someone who does the same. 7) The Slow Clap Origin: Orson Welles resolutely applauding his mistress' critical debut at the opera, as the title character of the classic film Citizen Kane in 1941. When to use it: This GIF is tricky because, while its subject is fiercely applauding, contextually we know that the target of its applause is objectively Not great, Bob. If you are engaged in a contextual reading, you must record this GIF for the moments when you make fun of someone who is alone in their commitment to a reckless idea. But if you just want to declare your unwavering support for someone online, go ahead and slowly tap on them all the way back. 6) Voiceless Nathan Fillion Origin: This famous GIF stars actor Nathan Fillion in the title role of Castle, and comes specifically from the 2009 episode Love Me Dead. Time sees Castle rendered momentarily speechless after his daughter told him she wants to go to abroad. When to use it: Whenever someone leaves you to a loss of words - and usually not in a good way. 5) Supa Hot Fire ultimate rap battle win Origin: satirical rapper Supa Hot Fire defeated upstart challenger B-Bone in 2011 in one of the biggest rap parodies combat videos on YouTube. When to use it: In context, context, Fan reactions surrounding Supa are supposed to be on top. Out of context, their hysteria offers the perfect GIF reaction to that moment when you are overwhelmed by the ultimate diss, mic drop, good witty word, or any other supremely badass event. 4) We were all rooting for you! Origin: Tyra Banks' unexpected eruption of a candidate from america's Next Top Model who just wasn't cutting it in 2005 went viral and became a famous reality TV moment - a GIF reaction before the GIF reaction really existed. When to use it: Every time someone disappoints you, and the Internet collectively, as they will inevitably because life is not fair. 3) Simon Cowell is happy for once origin: Simon Cowell's viral reaction to hearing Susan Boyle sing for the first time on The X Factor in 2009 captured a rare moment when the famous difficult to impress reality host experienced unexpected happiness. When to use it: Whenever a happy ray of pure, unfiltered delight punctures your dark and cynical soul. 2) Surprise! Everything's on fire. Origin: The 2012 episode of Community that spawned this GIF was nominated for an Emmy, and this everything is on fire moment is even funnier in the context of the scene of which it is part. When to use it: Every time you have briefly left something and returned to find the ensuing chaos, drama unfolding, or the madness that happens - or whenever you think you may have entered the darkest Timeline. 1) Popcorn.gif (Michael Jackson Eating Popcorn) Origin: This GIF is so ubiquitous that Internet users will often simply write popcorn.gif as a stenographer to share the actual image, which comes from Michael Jackson eating popcorn in a scene from the 1982 video for Thriller. It agrees that one of the most famous pop songs ever written has also produced the Internet's most recognizable reaction and all-purpose GIF. When to use it: Whenever there is a debate, someone makes an ass of themselves, or usually something entertaining happens online. So basically, anywhere and everywhere.
